

8 billion

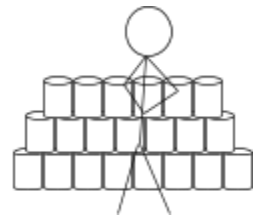

By Liam Neubauer,
one of many.

We've reached the peak of the curve,
our lives are unsustainable.
No more children.

The markets rose to high,
we kick out those beneath us.
No more homes.

The supply to demand plummets,
The lucky lucky few live on.
No more food.

The last of the reservoirs dry up,
only the resourceful remain.
No more water.

We go back to our roots of animals,
scrambling for the last morsel.
No more life.

We were so comfortable in our modern lives,
when the bubble burst,
we could not survive.
